The following is an excerpt from Michael Voris: Future Hanging in the Balance

There is a sense among politically conservative faithful Catholics that a tipping-point in history has arrived, and that the future for the Church and the nation hangs in the balance. While the Church Herself will endure owing to Our Lord's promise, there is zero guarantee She will endure in America.

The historical record is full of cases where the Church disappeared in specific geographical locations, and the Church in America, like anywhere else, is not guaranteed. Like the nation, it must be fought for.

But this much is certain and guaranteed: If socialism becomes dominant in America, it will be lights-out for the Church, from sea to shining sea. Both the Left and conservatives know this one is for all the marbles, no exceptions.

To restore the Church, which has been attacked from within for more than half a century, there needs to be a political and cultural environment where we are actually free, as citizens, to do this all-important work. Socialism will end religious liberty, disregard natural law, and defeat the common good. Catholics need a culture where we are free to talk about these things openly. We need to be able, for example, to call out errant bishops and clergy for supporting intrinsic evils or not fighting them strongly enough, without the threat of losing jobs or being arrested for speaking the truth.

This socialist mindset — crushing freedom of speech — is on the rise in various Western nations already.

It cannot happen here. In a temporal sense, truth needs freedom to be expressed.
